TO

FOLK-SONG JOURNAL, VOLS. I AND II.

NOTE.—The two volumes here dealt with were issued in nine separate parts, and for the convenience of those who have kept their journals in this form the number of the part is in each case given in a parenthesis after the Roman figure indicating the volume. The third figure refers to the paging, which is consecutive throughout a volume. A raised figure following the page number refers to the version, where more than one is given. Songs which are clearly variants of the same set of words are bracketed together; each heading, however, only includes those variants which actually contain the incident or name to which the heading refers. A few songs which occur in many forms, such as "The Seeds of Love," "There is an Alehouse," have special headings under which all variants are noted.

We have a flower in our garden	18
What colour was the fish, Rendal, my son? ..	31
When first in this country a stranger	150, 210
When I saw my love up the church go	14
When I was a young horse	264
When I was young and able	264
When I was young, and in my prime	167, 211
When I was young, and scarce eighteen	176
Where have you been to, all the day, Henery, my son?	29
Wrap me up in my black bearskin	244
You heroes of the day	186
Young Jim, he went hunting	59
Young Johnny was a ploughboy, so fresh ..	10
Young William, the ploughboy so brisk ..	11
Young women, they'll run	40
Young women, they sing like birds	41
You people, that live at home easy	193
