At mid - night hour I love to think Of those most dear, most far from me; And mem-'ry of-ten at that hour Would glad-ly wing its flight to thee; I would not that my form should rise Be-- fore thee in thy hours of 2.

Friends though scarce we sometimes see
 Whose hearts are always true and warm,
 Who like the ivy round the tree
 Cling closest in the raging storm.
 Should sorrow e'er thy beauty sear,
 Such friendship still I'll feel for thee,
 And when thou think'st of friends sincere
 I know thou must remember me.
