hours were pass'd as if each one Were but a mir-ror in the sun, Turning back the dazzling light It sheds upon the sur-face bright.

2

I will often think of thee,
When stars are in the skies;
And the billows of the sea
Sing spirit melodies.
When the glen is still, and not a note
Comes from the forest songster's throat,
To dispel the mystery
That hangs around sweet thoughts of thee.

3

I will often think of thee,
When in the dazzling halls;
When 'mid laugh and melody
Time's footstep heedless falls.
When amid the throng moves not the one
Who first my young affection won,
I will turn away to be
Alone alone in thought with thee.
