THE SPIRIT OF WANNA

THE SPIRIT OF WANNA is a story told by Medicine Moon, of the Kiowas: of a hunting trip to the Rocky Mountains when a young man. While visiting some of the Pueblo tribes, one of his party by the name of Towanda ran away with one of the Pueblo maidens whose name was Wanna. While on their way east through the mountains, Wanna died. Towanda buried her beneath the aspens. Before she died she told Towanda that the ghosts were calling her and that she could hear their song:-

(As sung by Medicine Moon)

The party returned to their prairie reservation but Towanda fasted continually and had visions. He told Medicine Moon that he would start west and find the grave of Wanna, for Medicine Moon to follow him after five suns. When Medicine Moon arrived at the grave he found it open and all of Wanna's belongings gone. Medicine Moon fasted long and in his dream he heard the voice of Wanna calling to her lover. Towanda never returned and Medicine Moon thinks that the Thunder Bird struck him and turned him into a naked pine to suffer from all the cold and heat forever.
