

EASTER.

Frederick Manley.

Allegro con spirito.

Henry K. Hadley.

There's a mu - sic up in the fro - zen hills, A gen - tly ex - ult - ant har - mo - ny: It ris - es and falls with a thou - sand trills, And all . . . the earth with its gladness fills; And foun - - tains and riv - ers and

and
And foun - tains and riv - - - - ers, lakes and rills Are laugh - ing a - loud, "We are free!

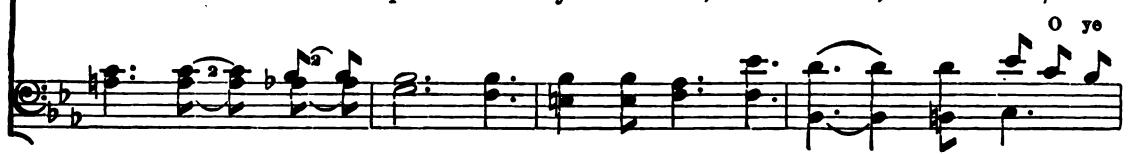

. . . lakes and rills

lakes and rills

We are free!" . . . A - rise from your dark-some bed and see That win - ter and death are past and ye are free, O flow'rs, are free;

O . . . ye flow'rs, are free! . . . A spir - it hath come to the flow'rs, sleep - ing earth, She has soft - ly kissed the life - less snow . . . With ra - di - ant lips and has giv - en birth To a ma - ny-voic'd gur - gling mirth, A cres.

ma - ny-voic'd gur - gling mirth. Her wings have hung o - ver the places of dearth,

And they

EASTER.

And the hid - den, And the hid - den streams of life now show Their blos - som with life in their glow, won - ders in all the buds which blow, A - bove their death - less flow.

A - rise, O laugh-ter of low - land leas, For your wood - land sis - ters be - gin to wake; The spir - it hath kiss'd the a - nem - o - nies, And the vir - gin flow'rs that the wood-bird sees From his nest in the

in the boughs

boughs of the boughs of wild fruit trees, . . . And the vio - let peeps from the of . . . wild
